Leading the Way:

A Weekly Exploration of Personal and Professional Development

Leading the Way

Daniel Richardson

Welcome to 'Leading the Way,' a weekly exploration of personal and professional development. In this column, we will delve into the principles of leadership and how to apply them in your daily life. From mastering the art of communication to developing a growth mindset, each week we will discuss strategies and insights to help you unlock your full potential as a leader. Whether you are a business leader, a manager, or simply looking to improve your leadership skills, this column offers valuable advice and practical tips to empower you on your journey of personal and professional growth. Join us as we navigate the challenges and opportunities of leadership and discover the leader within.

Unlocking Your Leadership Potential: A Deep Dive into John Maxwell's 21 Laws of Leadership

This first leadership series is an in-depth exploration of John Maxwell's book "The 21 Irrefutable Laws of Leadership." This series delves into each law, examining the key concepts and strategies that are essential for effective leadership. I am a huge fan of John Maxwell's teaching and my hope is that through this series, readers will gain a deeper understanding of the principles that drive successful leadership, and learn how to apply these principles in their own lives. Whether you're a business leader, a manager, or simply someone who wants to improve your leadership skills, this series offers valuable insights and practical advice to help you reach your full potential as a leader.

Raising the Bar: Mastering the First Law of Leadership - The Law of the Lid

In his book "The 21 Irrefutable Laws of Leadership," John Maxwell introduces the first law, the law of the lid, which states that "leadership ability is the lid that determines a person's level of effectiveness." This law is crucial for anyone who wants to become an effective leader, as it highlights the importance of personal development and the need to continually improve one's leadership skills.

According to Maxwell, the law of the lid states that every person has a lid that limits their effectiveness as a leader. The lid represents a person's level of leadership ability, and it can be raised or lowered based on the individual's willingness to develop and improve their leadership skills. The higher the lid, the more effective a person can be as a leader, and the lower the lid, the less effective they will be.

One of the key concepts in the law of the lid is that of self-awareness. To raise your lid, you must first be aware of your current level of leadership ability. This means that you must be honest with yourself about your strengths and weaknesses as a leader. Once you have a clear understanding of your current level of leadership, you can then begin to take steps to improve and raise your lid.

The law of the lid also emphasizes the importance of personal development. To raise your lid, you must be willing to invest time and energy into developing your leadership skills. This can include reading books on leadership, attending workshops or seminars, or seeking out mentorship or coaching. Additionally, it's important to consistently practice and apply what you have learned to see the results.

Another important aspect of the law of the lid is the need to surround yourself with people who have a higher lid than yourself. This means that you should seek out leaders who have a higher level of leadership ability than you and learn from them. This can be done through networking, mentorship, or simply observing their behavior and leadership style. By surrounding yourself with leaders who have a higher lid, you will be exposed to new ideas, perspectives, and strategies that can help you raise your own lid.

The law of the lid is a powerful concept that highlights the importance of personal development and self-awareness in becoming an effective leader. It emphasizes that leadership ability is the lid that determines a person's level of effectiveness and that everyone has a lid that can be raised or lowered based on their willingness to develop and improve their leadership skills. To raise your lid, it's important to be aware of your current level of leadership ability, invest time and energy into personal development, and surround yourself with leaders who have a higher lid than yourself. By following the law of the lid, you can become a more effective leader and make a significant impact in your personal and professional life.

Maintenance intervals drivers should know

Vehicles are among the most costly expenses individuals have. According to data from Kelley Blue Book, the average price paid for a new vehicle in the United States in September 2022 was $48,094. Canadian car buyers face an equally expensive reality in their country, where the average MSRP for a new car is more than $45,000.

Since vehicles are such sizable investments, it behooves motorists to do as much as they can to keep their cars and trucks running smoothly. Vehicle owner's manuals typically recommend maintenance intervals and should be drivers' first resource for information regarding how to take care of their cars and trucks. But the following are some standard maintenance intervals drivers can keep in mind.

3,000 miles

The 3,000-mile marker used to be the benchmark for changing oil, but modern vehicles can now go longer between oil changes. However, it's still a good idea to check other fluid levels every 3,000 miles. Windshield washer fluid, coolant, brake fluid, transmission fluid, and power steering fluid should all be checked every 3,000 miles and topped off if levels are low.

It's wise for drivers to perform some additional maintenance checkups every 3,000 miles. Check tire pressure, inspect hoses (which should not be leaking or bulging) and clean the interior of the vehicle every 3,000 miles.

5,000 miles

Many vehicle manufacturers now recommend oil changes every 5,000 miles. Tire rotations also can be part of service visits at this interval, and drivers can ask their mechanic to check their fuel filters and batteries every 5,000 miles as well. Many may already do this as part of their comprehensive maintenance packages, but it's still good to confirm if they do and request they do so if it's not part of the plan.

Drivers also can request that cabin air filters are inspected at this point, though they can generally last a year before they need to be replaced.

Around the 5,000-mile mark, wiper blades also may begin to show signs of wear and tear, including streaking on the windshield or scratching noises when in use. Each of those signs indicates the wipers need to be replaced. However, drivers should take note of these signs regardless of when they appear. Some may not make it 5,000 miles before they begin to wear down. In such instances, they should be replaced immediately regardless of how many miles it's been since they were installed.

10,000 miles

Some vehicles may only require oil changes every 10,000 miles. That's not uncommon in vehicles that use synthetic oil, though drivers are urged to consult their owner's manuals.

Brake pads also may need to be replaced around this time, and one telltale sign of that is a squeaking noise whenever the brakes are applied.

Drivers can ask their mechanics to check the alignment of their vehicles around this interval as well. Though many vehicles won't develop alignment issues, it's best to check for such issues every 10,000 miles or whenever a vehicle feels as though it's pulling in one specific direction.

Maintenance intervals are created to serve as a guideline for drivers. Any issues that arise should still be brought to the attention of a mechanic regardless of how many miles have been added to the odometer since the most recent trip to the garage.

A father's direction

Ad Veritas

Daniel Richardson

Editors note: 'Ad Veritas,' a phrase that springs from the profound depth of the Latin language, is the fitting title for this new column. Its translation to English echoes 'Towards Truth' or 'To the Truth,' an eloquent yet profound mantra that encapsulates the essence of the path we are about to traverse together. Each column is a step towards uncovering and understanding deeper truths, probing a myriad of topics, narratives, and perspectives. With an intention to both honor and continue the legacy of 'My View,' my father's cherished column, 'Ad Veritas' promises a fresh voice and a dedicated pursuit of truth. This column symbolizes more than a series of articles—it is an ongoing dialogue with you, our readers, as we collectively navigate the pathways to truth in our ever-changing world. We invite you to join us in this enriching journey, finding not only knowledge but also inspiration, from the perspectives shared in 'Ad Veritas.'

In the vast expanse of the universe, there are few relationships as profound, as complex, and as deeply influential as that between a father and child. Whether intentional or not, a father chisels his son's character, shapes his perspectives, and guides him towards his own understanding of life's many truths. And when his time comes to say goodbye, he leaves behind not just a legacy of love, but also a compass that navigates us through the meandering paths of life.

My father, Dennis Richardson, was the embodiment of these sentiments. His legacy persists not only through the life he lived but the truths he imparted, and the myriad lessons I absorbed in his presence. As we journey through 'Ad Veritas,' towards truth, I cannot help but honor his memory, his teachings, and the tremendous impact he's had on my life.

This column carries a piece of him, a reflection of the profound influence he had, not just as a father, but as a mentor, and as a guide in my quest for truth. I invite you to join me in honoring not just my father, but all fathers - those who are with us today and those who continue to inspire us from beyond the earthly realm.

My father was a well-spring of life lessons and practical advice. I'd like to share three invaluable lessons he instilled in me - the art of writing, resilience in business, and the power of dreaming.

He taught me the potency of the written word. His wisdom guided me, showing me how to craft words that could touch hearts, change minds, and illumnate the truth. He demonstrated the importance of clear, precise language, and nurtured in me a deep respect for the rhythm and power that words possess.

Secondly, my father was a dedicated businessman who never knew when to quit - and I say that as the highest praise. He was a believer in the underdog and a practitioner of tenacity. He taught me that 'odds' are just numbers, that they don't define outcomes unless you allow them to. He showed me how to look at setbacks not as failures but as opportunities to learn, grow, and come back stronger. He started his career as a journalist, making his way through several newsrooms in Tennessee before saving up the money and relational capital to buy his first newspaper in Huntingdon. Facing local competition, dwindling financial resources, and several setbacks, he and Mom (and current Carroll County News-Leader editor Shirley Nanney) dug deep within them to do what it took to make it work, soon buying out the local competition and then expanding the company to the next county over with the purchase of the Camden Chronicle.

And third, he taught me to dream. My father was a visionary, a man who could look beyond the surface, past the mundane, and into the realm of what could be. He taught me to imagine fearlessly, to see not just with my eyes but with my mind and heart. He encouraged me to explore the boundaries of my imagination, to create what others deemed impossible. His lesson was clear - dreams are the blueprints of reality; without them, progress would cease.

These three lessons - the art of writing, resilience in business, and the power of dreaming - are pillars that shape my life. They are guiding stars in the vast sky of learning my father left behind. And on this Father's Day, I honor him, thankful for the profound influence he had on my life.

I'd like to add here that I also have an amazing father-in-law. For the past 11 (almost 12) years, Terry Larkins has helped me immensely as a mentor and adviser in different areas. Thanks to this relationship, I've been blessed with the opportunity to learn from his vast life experiences as he's taught me about construction, plumbing, electrical, automaintenance, and life in general.

I invite each one of you to reflect on the lessons learned from your fathers, to appreciate their influence and cherish their wisdom. Because the journey towards truth, towards 'Ad Veritas,' is illuminated by the lessons learned at our father's knee.
